Abstract

The EU, which provided a significant level of economic integration, has not been able to integrate political and military points. No common policies can be produced at the point of common defense and security. The union, which is far from following a common foreign policy, is divided in two, especially by the USA in the Iraqi occupation process. Germany and France opposed the Iraqi invasion, while Britain was a party to the United States. This division into two has reached a critical level in terms of unity with the decision of the UK to split in 2016.

Germany is at the forefront in shaping EU policies with France, with strong economic and political will. With its competitiveness, dominant position in the domestic market, force in the international political , having the least political and economical problems among the EU countries, and with its historical experience, Germany has become the most important country to lead the union after Britain's split decision. Major crises, such as the crises of Ukraine and Georgia, necessitate Germany take on more initiative and costs.

Approximately 3 million Turkish citizens living in Germany are mutual assurances of strong relations between the two countries. The economic and political relations between Germany and Turkey have continued to strengthen everyday in the last 50 years. In 2016, Turkey became the country with the largest number of exports. There are many issues in which the interests of Germany and Turkey, two important members of international organizations such as the G-20, NATO and the UN, are combined and act together. However, the conflict between the interests of Germany and Turkey in recent years has negatively affected relations between the two countries. Along with the power changes that are taking place, the divergence of views between the two countries in some politics is getting deeper and deeper. By the economic and military support that Germany has given to the terrorist organizations operating in Turkey, relations between the two countries have risen to the point of experiencing a major crisis. Moreover, the way that German politicians do politics through the Turks in Turkey and Turkey also affects relations negatively.

Turkey is assuming a playful role as a regional actor with the economic and political stability since 2000. Turkey is a rival to Germany in the Middle East and Africa with its economic potential. Utilizing its potential to be close to energy sources, Turkey has begun to take advantage of Germany, which is heavily dependent on energies with its giant economy. In the process of experiencing with the Syrian civil war, Turkey provided an impressive superiority over Germany, which played a leading role in the EU and failed to bring a solution to the refugee crisis.
